Unit 1

Section A

Directions: In this section, you will hear two news reports. At the end of each news report, you will hear two questions. Both the news report and the questions will be spoken only once. After you hear a question, you must choose the best answer from the four choices marked A), B), C) and D).

Questions 1 and 2 will be based on the following news item.

Doreetha Daniels became the focus of attention today during the graduation ceremony at the College of the Canyons. At 99, Daniels became the oldest graduate ever from this college, earning a two-year college degree in social sciences. She achieved her own personal goal of earning a college degree before turning 100, and set a good example for her young classmates to never give up.

Daniels had been dreaming of going to college since she was a young girl growing up in Nebraska. Her idea of going to school came when she watched her grandchildren get their master's degrees. "So I said, 'Well, I'm not doing anything. I'm tired of my hobbies, so I'm going to go to school,'" Daniels said. She could no longer drive after suffering two serious illnesses during her seven years studying at the college. Her son said that the challenges didn't slow her down.

Now that Daniels has her two-year college degree, her family is encouraging her to go for her four-year degree. Daniels said she would think about it.

1. What do we learn about Daniels from this news report?
2. What is Daniels's family encouraging her to do now?

Questions 3 and 4 will be based on the following news item.

A European boy has become the youngest person to fly around the globe alone in a light aircraft.

Mack Rutherford, 17, landed at Sofia, the capital of Bulgaria, after a five-month journey across 52 countries in five continents. He had set off from the same city on March 23 to pursue his dream of achieving the world record. "I want to meet young people during my journey who do great things, making a difference in the lives of those around them or even to the world," he wrote before setting off.

After finishing the flight, Mack encouraged others to follow their dreams, no matter how old they are. "Work hard and move forward to achieve your goals," he added.

Asked what his plans for the future were, Mack said: "I'm going to keep flying. I'm thinking of something like the air force, but I'm nowhere 100% sure on anything. After I finish this, I've just got to focus on school and try to catch up as much as I can."

3. What world record has Mack Rutherford set?
4. What does Mack have to do after his flight?

Directions: In this section, you will hear two news reports. At the end of each news report, you will hear two questions. Both the news report and the questions will be spoken only once. After you hear a question, you must choose the best answer from the four choices marked A), B), C) and D).

Questions 1 and 2 will be based on the following news item.

A new study says students who attended for-profit private colleges in the United States to learn a trade saw their earnings drop.

The report by the National Bureau of Economic Research said, on average, people who attended for-profit colleges made $920 less per year after they left school compared to before they started. People who attended public two-year colleges earned about $1,500 more per year than they did before starting their studies, the report said. And, the report noted that about nine out of ten students borrowed money to attend for-profit colleges. The average debt for people attending two-year for-profit colleges was $8,000. The report looked at schools preparing students for a number of trades, including health care, car repair and beauty treatment.

Overall, researchers found that many students who attended for-profit schools made less money than they did before going to these colleges. They found lower pay and higher debt for people attending private, for-profit schools, compared to public colleges in all 50 U.S. states.

1. What is the news report mainly about?
2. How much do students borrow on average to attend two-year for-profit colleges?

Questions 3 and 4 will be based on the following news item.

High school students spend years taking classes that will help them deal with the challenges of college courses. But according to a new national survey, most freshmen were unprepared for campus in one important way: emotionally. The First Year College Experience survey, conducted by three organizations, The JED Foundation, Partnership for Drug-Free Kids, and The Jordan Porco Foundation, found that 60 percent of freshmen said they wished they had "more help getting emotionally ready for college."

Emotional preparedness refers to the ability to take care of oneself, learn to grow in new environments, control unpleasant emotions or behavior and build good relationships. It is closely linked to the success of a student's freshman year. The survey of 1,502 college freshmen showed that those who felt less emotionally prepared for college had lower GPAs and would more probably say that their first-year experience was "terrible."

Researchers pointed out that teachers and parents put emphasis on preparing high school students for exams and college-level classes, but did not prepare them for life away at college. They recommended teaching students life skills, such as managing time, money, sleep, eating habits, and relationships.

3. What do we learn about many freshmen from the news report?
4. What did researchers think teachers and parents should teach students?

   D) Government spending on wars.
4. A) Aid projects to be discussed require too much money.
   B) The discussion is not going to be about money issues.
   C) The EU wants developing countries to borrow money.
   D) The governments will consider using money for wars.

答：1.C 2.B 3.B 4.D

Unit 3

Section A

Directions: In this section, you will hear two news reports. At the end of each news report, you will hear two questions. Both the news report and the questions will be spoken only once. After you hear a question, you must choose the best answer from the four choices marked A), B), C) and D).

Questions 1 and 2 will be based on the following news item.

It is not always true that the good die young. Sir Nicholas Winton, a British man who helped save hundreds of Jewish children from the Holocaust during World War II, has died at the age of 106. His work has been compared to that of Oskar Schindler, a German who saved 1,200 Jews by employing them in his factories in Poland and Czechoslovakia. What Winton did was to rescue 669 mostly Jewish children in Czechoslovakia from the Nazis in the months before the Second World War broke out. Winton was a London businessman in December 1938 when he arranged trains to help the children flee Nazi occupation and found British families to look after them. This was a good deed Winton performed secretly, and it was not generally known about for nearly 50 years until revealed on the BBC's That's Life! TV programme.

Winton did not particularly like being called "the British Schindler". He had kept quiet about his deed. The British Prime Minister remembered Winton on social media, writing, "The world has lost a great man. We must never forget Sir Nicholas Winton's humanity in saving so many children from the Holocaust."

1. What do we learn about Sir Nicholas Winton from this report?
2. How did people start to learn about Winton as a great man?

Questions 3 and 4 will be based on the following news item.

One in every nine children is raised in a war zone, according to a report released on Tuesday by the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund, or UNICEF. Two hundred and fifty million young people are living in war zones and with the number of people fleeing these regions at its highest since World War II, every second refugee is a child.

In 2015 alone, some 75 million children were born into war zones, said the report.

What makes matters complicated, the UN agency said, is that besides the risks to health and safety, regional violence makes it impossible to get educated. Every day, the report said, an average of four schools are targeted by violent attacks. This has made it impossible for 75 million children between the ages of 3 and 18 to go to kindergarten or school. For this reason, governments must focus their spending on development instead of wars, said the head of UNICEF Germany, Jürgen Heraeus. At the presentation of the report in Berlin, he expressed his disappointment at a planned European Union discussion to take money away from aid projects in developing countries and use it for military purposes.

3. What is the news report mainly about?
4. Why was the head of UNICEF Germany disappointed at a European Union discussion?

Unit 4

   B) Its progress makes people proud of their country.
   C) It has got a lot of media attention in recent years.
   D) Its success is due to the strong national support.

答：1.A 2.D 3.C 4.B

Questions 1 and 2 will be based on the following news item.

A video of a boy in Qingdao saying goodbye in tears to his father, a soldier who had to return to duty unexpectedly, has touched millions of Chinese.

The boy was spending time with his father, who returned home on Friday. Their great time, however, did not last long as his father had to leave again the next day for his job with the army.

In the video posted on social media, the boy can be seen bursting into tears, begging his father not to go. He then runs to the door and blocks it to prevent his father from leaving. His father comforts him as he continues to cry. Eventually he opens the door for his father to leave before running back into the living room without looking back at his father. "Bye, dad," the boy says.

The video has received nearly 3 million views. Many viewers say the boy's eventual acceptance and sacrifice of his own to allow his father to leave has touched their hearts. One viewer writes, "Good boy. Your dad is a hero, and so are you."

1. What do we learn from the news report about the boy's father?
2. What has made the video receive a large number of views?

Questions 3 and 4 will be based on the following news item.

Chinese space scientists were specially honored as inspiring role models in this year's Touching China awards announced by China Central Television on Thursday.

From the launch of China's first man-made earth satellite "Dongfanghong-1" in 1970 to today, Chinese space exploration has gone from near-earth to deep space, from unmanned to manned, and from the moon to Mars. China's space community has opened new horizons in the starry universe, including building China's own space station, landing beyond the Earth-Moon system with the Mars spacecraft "Tianwen-1", and exploring Mars.

Zhu Bo, director of the program "Touching China", said that China's space program has achieved remarkable development in recent years, which has brought strong national pride to the Chinese people.

The yearly "Touching China" program, which was first broadcast in 2003, honors those who touched the nation with their dedication, bravery and creativity over the last year.

3. What is the news report mainly about?
4. What does the director of "Touching China" say about China's space program?

   B) Social and cultural factors.
   C) Geographical and climate factors.
   D) Human and natural factors.

答: 1.B 2.C 3.A 4.D

Questions 1 and 2 will be based on the following news item.

Germany's Rhine River is getting too dry, creating more problems for its struggling economy, German officials said on Friday.

Water in the river has dropped to extremely low levels in some areas, making it difficult to transport goods on the country's most important inland waterway. Agricultural products, goods like coal and oil, and chemicals are moved through the river to and from the power plants and factories that line the riverbank every day. A lack of rainfall in recent months means that ships are now carrying lighter loads, transport costs are rising, and power supply risks are becoming worse.

Last month, the German government warned that water flows west of Frankfurt were already at just 45% of average levels for this time of year. It said that had prevented ships from going through. Now, water levels are expected to fall even further before rising "very slightly" in the coming weeks.

Environmentalists are also warning that rising temperatures across Europe this summer are causing high levels of pollutants, which can be damaging to the plants and animals in the river.

1. What is happening in Germany's Rhine River?
2. According to environmentalists, what factor is responsible for high pollutant levels in the river?

Questions 3 and 4 will be based on the following news item.

Economic and population growth in addition to climate change could lead to serious water shortages across many parts of Asia by the year 2050, according to a new study by scientists at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, or MIT.

The study uses detailed computer modeling to predict various probabilities involving water availability and use in the future. In the paper, the scientists conclude there is a high risk of severe water stress in much of Asia that is home to roughly half the world's population.

While climate change is expected to have serious effects on the water supply in many parts of the world, the study puts emphasis on how much industrial expansion and population growth may make water access problems worse. "It's not just a climate change issue," says co-author Adam Schlosser. "We simply cannot ignore that economic and population growth in society can have a very strong influence on our demand for resources and how we manage them. And climate, moreover, can help to increase those stresses considerably."

3. What is the news report mainly about?
4. What factors can affect our demand for resources, according to Adam Schlosser?

Unit 6

Questions 1 and 2 will be based on the following news item.

1. A) It has elected an independent committee.
   B) Its addicted villagers can get medical help.
   C) Its people go offline for a while every night.
   D) It has Internet access for every family now.
2. A) She learns to start to work in the kitchen.
   B) Her husband can come back home earlier.
   C) People in her family are still too busy to interact.
   D) Her children can pay attention to their independence.

Questions 3 and 4 will be based on the following news item.

3. A) Children using social media at school have lower grades.
   B) Too much social media use harms children's mental health.
   C) 12% of children spend too much time on social media sites.
   D) 27% of people addicted to social media are children.
4. A) They feel bad about themselves when seeing a doctor.
   B) They often delay what they need to do in real life.
   C) They find it hard to pay attention in the classroom.
   D) They can't tell online worlds from the real world.

答: 1.C 2.B 3.B 4.D

Questions 1 and 2 will be based on the following news item.

A village in India has declared "independence" from a modern-day addiction — the mobile phone. At least, for a couple of hours every day.

A warning bell rings from a temple at 7 p.m. every evening in Vadgaon village on the west coast of India, telling all residents to turn off mobile phones. The device of "addiction" can be turned on when the village committee rings the bell again at 8:30 p.m.

"We decided at the village meeting on 14 August, the eve of India's Independence Day, that we needed to stop this addiction," said Vijay Mohite, president of the village committee, who proposed the idea of a digital detox.

Changes are happening. "The children couldn't pay attention to their studies before," said Vandana Sharma, a villager who has two school-going sons. "Now, it is far easier for my husband to return home from work and help them study and I can peacefully do my work in the kitchen. We can now have normal conversations."

Vadgaon village has a population of about 3,000 people, made up largely of farmers and sugar factory workers.

1. What do we learn from the report about the Indian village?
2. What does the villager Vandana Sharma say about the change in her family?

Questions 3 and 4 will be based on the following news item.

Children who spend more than three hours each school day on social media sites are more than twice as likely to suffer poor mental health, official figures have shown.

While 12 percent of children who spend no time on social networking websites have signs of mental ill-health, the figure rises to 27 percent for those who spend three hours or more a day on the sites, a report from the Office for National Statistics showed.

Experts say such children may have delays in their emotional and social development because they spend so much time online.

Dr Hayley Van Zwanberg, who treats children with mental illness, said: "Children are totally addicted to online worlds which are damaging both to the way they see themselves and the way they get to know the real world; some young children are finding it hard to tell what is real from what is not real."

3. What do we learn about children's social media use from the news report?
4. What do experts say about children addicted to online worlds?

Tai Chi is a form of martial arts and also a fitness exercise, with a long history in China. Its movements are slow and gentle, suitable for people of any age, gender, or build. Tai Chi can be used for self-defense and for improving health, and is therefore deeply loved by the Chinese people. During its development, Tai Chi drew from and absorbed reasonable elements of traditional Chinese philosophy, medicine, and martial arts, becoming a distinctive sport. As a unique form of exercise in China, Tai Chi is also increasingly favored by many foreign friends.

Confucius was a famous thinker and educator in Chinese history, the founder of Confucianism, and was honored as an ancient "sage." His sayings and life activities are recorded in the book The Analects. The Analects is a classic of ancient Chinese culture and has greatly influenced later thinkers, writers, and politicians throughout history. Without studying The Analects, one cannot truly grasp the traditional culture of China over thousands of years. Many of Confucius' ideas, especially his educational thoughts, have had a profound impact on Chinese society. The fifteenth day of the eighth month in the Chinese lunar calendar is China's traditional festival—the Mid-Autumn Festival. This time is the middle of the autumn season, so it is called Mid-Autumn. An important activity during the Mid-Autumn Festival is moon viewing. At night, people admire the bright moon and eat mooncakes to celebrate the festival together. The Mid-Autumn Festival is also a time for family reunions. Those who are far from home express their longing for their hometown and loved ones on this occasion. There are many customs associated with the Mid-Autumn Festival, all reflecting people's love and hope for a better life. Since 2008, the Mid-Autumn Festival has become an official public holiday in China.

Social media is a popular way to connect with friends and family. It has many positive effects on internet users' lives, such as staying in touch with distant relatives, keeping up with social hot topics, and acquiring knowledge in fragmented ways. However, social media also brings troubles to internet users, mainly in three aspects: reduced reading time, negative impacts on health such as sleep and eyesight, and risks to personal privacy and security. It is worth noting that the post-90s generation feels the negative effects of social media more strongly, with nearly 40% of them saying they will avoid becoming "slaves" to their phones.
